We live in a world of complex relationships that challenge us daily. In particular, our relationships with our colleagues can be difficult at times.

We must remember that God calls us first to be servants. When I think of service to others, I remember Dorcas in Acts 9 who served and cooked for the poor widows and orphans of Joppa. In Acts 16, we read about Lydia—a career woman. She opened her home to those in need and she witnessed daily to her business associates of her faith in Christ.

These are wonderful examples of women being used for God’s glory as they use their gifts. We can only be at our best when we fit into God’s plan for our lives and serve others—even when it’s difficult.

Making It Personal

When is it most difficult for me to serve others? Why?
